

Armando has degrees in Spanish Language and Literature, Psychology, and International Studies. He has been interpreting professionally since 1999 and became state certified as a court interpreter in 2000 and federally certified in 2002. In 2012 he became certified by NAJIT as a Judiciary interpreter and Translator. He is also an ATA-certified translator who served as Administrator of ATA's Interpreters' Division. He is a Licensed Health Care Interpreting Trainer and has contributed to the creation of the CCHI national certification exam. He has worked in the industry side of the profession, first as a Director of Quality Assurance and then as a Director of Programs for a major LSP. He currently resides in Philadelphia where he is a Professor of Interpretation and Translation Studies at La Salle University. He regularly speaks and has published on topics of interest to the profession. He is interested in hearing your ideas as to how to help strengthen, by promoting and defending the profession while representing it with the input and support of fellow NAJIT members.
