NAJIT 40th ANNUAL CONFERENCE

PROGRAM

GAYLORD OPRYLAND
Nashville, Tennessee
Dear Colleagues,

Welcome to NAJIT’s 40th Anniversary Conference! This conference brings you a rich selection of sessions that have been carefully chosen to appeal to the wide-ranging interests of our membership. We take our tagline of “Empowering Interpreters and Translators Worldwide” very seriously and endeavor to provide you with the many professional tools you need to thrive in our chosen professions of Translation and Interpretation.

One of my favorite words and one that I truly feel is connected to our annual conference, is “Serendipity” which means finding something unexpectedly. That is exactly what happens when you attend a NAJIT conference. We come expecting skill building, networking, and new approaches to dealing with ethical conundrums. What we may not be expecting could end up being exactly what changes the trajectory of our careers. We belong to wonderful professions where the sky is the limit. Many of us have established ourselves first as medical, educational, court or conference interpreters, or as in-house or freelance translators; that may very well be just the beginning! Instead of waiting for the perfect assignments to fall in our laps, we have the power to create new markets and expand into underserved areas. NAJIT is what brings all of us together to make that happen.

I invite you to review the conference program. You may have noticed some subtle changes this year. This is the first year we have added a specific session on Friday that offers continuing education credits for attorneys. This is something of a pilot project as we encourage and welcome all stakeholders to join us at our conference. Our plan is to continue with this project next year, and we invite all of you to help us get the word out.

We have had a momentous year with the addition of healthcare benefits for nearly all member categories. Our goal is to give our freelance colleagues more options as they look to keep costs under control and care for themselves and their families. The discounted rate for ‘paymentpractices.net’ gives translators and interpreters direct access to crowd-sourced information about reputable and not so reputable agencies. As technology advances, so do the methods used by scammers, and together we can protect ourselves from falling victim to those who unscrupulously prey on freelancers. Whether we are employees or freelancers, our professions can sometimes feel like a solitary venture, but as an association that brings us all together as a unified force, we become stronger than the sum of our parts.

We sincerely hope you enjoy your association’s 40th Anniversary Conference and continue to share your suggestions, ideas, and visions as we strive to make them a reality. With your support, NAJIT will continue to grow, providing an ever stronger and highly respected platform to advocate for our professions and our professional development.

Sincerely,

Aimee Benavides, Chair

Join us at the Luncheon and Annual Meeting on Saturday to hear from Vallie Collins. Mrs. Collins is a motivational speaker and survivor of the U.S. Airways flight that landed in the Hudson River in New York, in January of 2009.

Vallie will share the details of her experience during the flight and rescue of what has become known as the ‘Miracle on the Hudson’. In addition, she will share key lessons gained from the experience that will hopefully inspire and motivate all to treasure each day because ‘everyday is a lucky day’!

Whenever interpreters get together to share stories about their work “in the trenches,” the horror stories inevitably start to emerge. We hear stories about attorneys who try to shame us for the charges we put on our invoices, or agencies that offer every possible service for workers’ compensation, but for whom interpreting services are an afterthought. What steps can we take to change that dynamic? If we simply complain among ourselves, what would that really accomplish? We are professionals, but how can we persuade others to treat us as such? What does it truly mean to be a professional? What else do we need to do to truly talk the talk and walk the walk? What role do our professional associations play in all this?

Like the true language professionals that we are, we start by defining what constitutes a profession. A quick search will show you that the number one definition is “a paid occupation, especially one that involves prolonged training and a formal qualification.” (Oxford Dictionaries: https://en.oxforddictionaries.com/definition/profession)

A profession denotes employment, but it can also be categorized as “a calling requiring specialized knowledge and often long and intensive academic preparation,” according to Meriam Webster. (https://www.merriam-webster.com/dictionary/profession)

Let’s just stop to think about some of the professionals whose services we use and from whom we expect a high level of specialized knowledge. One profession that comes to mind at this time is that of accountant. We generally pay accountants fees commensurate with the value we get from them. Are they... knowledgeable and up-to-date with the most recent changes that inevitably occur in tax law every year? They don’t just keep up with the changes intuitively. Generally, an accountant would not adhere to the same criteria or even use the same technology for 10, 15, or 20 years. If an accountant goes about his work the exact same way using the exact same approaches that were in use 20 years ago, we’d run for the nearest exit. Why should it be any different for interpreters?

The current practice for interpreters in the United States is to enter the profession after passing a performance examination that verifies that they are at least minimally qualified to perform the tasks required of them. What each interpreter does after passing the certification exam is just as important, if not more so, than the preparation they went through for their examinations. Unfortunately, we lack a national standard in this country, and each state has the discretion to set continuing education requirements or not for interpreters who have achieved certification. It is the position of the National Association of Judiciary Interpreters and Translators (NAJIT) and of its Board of Directors, that we as interpreters need to set those standards for ourselves. We want to be treated, respected, and remunerated as professionals, and therefore it is our responsibility to be at the forefront dictating what requirements an interpreter needs to meet to perform effectively and be considered a professional.

We invite you to join the efforts of NAJIT volunteers in shaping and deciding these issues for ourselves. The Training and Education Committee will be developing a set of guidelines for the identification of those subjects for which NAJIT will grant continuing education credits in the future. We will also be developing a process for the approval of workshops and classes that meet our high standards. Once we have those guidelines and policies in place, we will need help in convincing those states that currently have no CEU requirements of the critical role continuing education plays in building a professional and reliable interpreter corps to serve the judiciary. We also have to establish NAJIT as the most suitable and competent entity to be entrusted with the granting and approval of continuing education credits. If we want our voices to be heard, we have to roll up our sleeves and actively participate. NAJIT is an interpreter and translator association that brings together volunteers who make things happen!

It is your participation and support that will give NAJIT the strength to forge ahead and shape our professions for the benefit of both the practitioners and those who need our services.

$$ Separate Fee Required, [LN] Language Neutral, [SL] English w/ Spanish Lexicon
Forensic Transcription/Translation (FTT) work is an increasingly important element in litigation and with it comes an increased need for well-trained FTT practitioners capable of producing evidence-worthy transcripts. This fast-paced workshop will cover the procedures, protocols and ethics required to create defensible FTT products suitable for use in court proceedings. Participants will learn the proper formatting of FTT documents. They will be introduced to listening techniques and specialized software they can use to convert and enhance A/V files, improve listening conditions, create "speaker profiles", and optimize their comprehension of recorded speech. Legal and ethical aspects of FTT translations will be considered in terms of accuracy, fidelity, coded/irregular language usage and terminology research. Each participant will receive a DVD handout containing support documents, templates, software links and a selection of sound files they can use afterward for practicing skills learned during the workshop.

Objectives: Attendees will acquire knowledge of the standard procedures, protocols and ethics required for Forensic Transcription/Translation (FTT) work including proper text formatting, optimized listening skills, and the legal/ethical parameters; The ability to use specialized software for better transcription output and to improve their presentation in court; and how to practice these skills at home.
Many interpreters are not aware of the wide variety of options within legal interpretation. This workshop will show participants the other face of the profession: The world of interpreting outside the courtroom. The first half of the workshop will deal with interpreting and translating International Law cases between the United States and Mexico. Those attending will learn the basic principles of international law, the parts of an international treaty, and how to prepare and interpret for an extradition hearing according to the extradition treaty between these countries, or an international child abduction under The Hague Convention. The second part will explore the popular field of interpreting depositions, mediation, and arbitration involving parties and legislation from Mexico and the United States. Attendees will learn the differences between depositions, mediation and arbitration, will have a hands-on exercise simulating an international dispute, and they will also get many practical tips on how to do a rendition in these international proceedings. By the end of the day, those attending the workshop will have several new tools in their professional toolbox, and a broader view of their professional future.

Objectives: The attendees will be aware of legal interpreting options outside the courtroom, covering basic principles of International Law: Ius Soli, Ius Sanguinis, Ius Fori, Locus Regit Actum, and the 2 types of international law: public and private; how to read and practice interpreting the parts of an international treaty, concretely the extradition Treaty between Mexico and the U.S., its terminology and proceedings, and a Hague international child abduction hearing. Lastly, attendees will learn the differences between depositions, mediation and arbitration in Mexico-U.S. cases, including preparation, protocol, and a mock practice group exercise.
This language-neutral session is designed to help working court interpreters devise strategies for making the transition to conference interpreting by identifying best practices and the professional ethics demanded by colleagues, direct clients and conference organizers. The practical, hands-on pre-conference workshop is designed to guide participants in identifying similarities and differences in the conference and court interpreting worlds and to identify potential avenues for continuing education and professional development with a view toward working on the conference circuit.

Objectives: Attendees will garner a solid grasp of the best practices and professional ethics demanded on the conference market by colleagues, conference organizers and direct clients by comparing and contrasting those standards with practices in the court interpreting environment.

This is an interactive workshop during which interpreters will identify strategies by which they can consciously or inadvertently introduce bias into their renditions. Various aspects of linguistic pragmatics—hedges, ungrammatical pauses, uber politeness, tag questions, implicit information, among others—will be discussed, with demonstrations and practical exercises for participants to identify exactly how these become part of the source-language (SL) speaker’s overall message and how to best incorporate them into the target language rendition. Participants will acquire strategies to forestall any pragmatic elements that insert unwanted bias in their interpretations. Exercises will be in the consecutive mode, although the principles may be applied in simultaneous interpreting as well. The focus will be on how we communicate meaning in different social situations, with special emphasis on formal legal settings, and how interpreters understand and convey the SL speaker’s intended meaning. One of the issues to be addressed in depth is how a rendition that adds certain pragmatic elements to the original message can distort the listener’s perception of the original speaker, affecting that speaker’s credibility and reliability as a witness.

Objectives: Attendees will learn what aspects of linguistic pragmatics have a bearing on the source-language (SL) speaker’s overall message and on the accurate rendition of that message, as well as which of those can insert bias into the listener’s perception of a speaker. Furthermore, attendees will be able to examine the effect on the examination process and on witness-interpreter exchanges of the negotiation of repairs, such as requests for clarification.
Participants should come prepared to record themselves with an app on their phone or an audio recording device.

Whether an interpreter is preparing for an exam or simply wants to maintain their skills, a defined strategy for practice sessions is the key to productive interpreting practice. Even for those working as full-time interpreters, there is nothing like the deep reflection and analysis of one’s performance in a practice session to help hone your craft. A solid interpreting skill improvement strategy includes honest self-assessment and setting specific goals for every practice session that goes beyond “take good notes,” “master all technical vocabulary,” or “interpret everything perfectly.” This session will cover goal-setting, resources for practice material, honing language and vocabulary skills in downtime, giving and receiving feedback, and tips for solo and group practice. Participants will try their hand at practical exercises that help hone an interpreter’s skill with a special focus on paraphrasing, a valuable exercise that builds the mental agility necessary for interpretation. This workshop is suitable for experienced interpreters looking to get unstuck and achieve a long-desired goal of passing a specific exam, for beginners who feel overwhelmed by the daunting task of learning this craft, and anyone in between!

Objectives: Participants will develop a strategy for interpretation skill-building, engage in practical skill-building exercises and practice giving and receiving peer feedback.

This workshop is designed for interpreters seeking an edge to increase their skill level. The presentation, open to interpreters of all languages and specialties, will give attendees tools to critically evaluate their interpreting output, thus utilizing their study time more effectively. The presenter will break down all three modes of interpretation, covering everything from effective listening in Consecutive, to speed in Simultaneous, to previewing a document for Sight Translation. Attendees will receive a multitude of practical exercises and techniques to approach different problem areas such as names and numbers, fast-paced speakers and long, complicated utterances. Whether they hope to pass an interpreting exam or simply improve their on-the-job renditions, attendees will come away from the presentation more confident, prepared, and ready to achieve their professional goals.

Objectives: Session participants will leave the workshop with an in-depth understanding of how to improve their skills in all three modes of interpreting.

Frustrated with fast speakers/presenters when simultaneously interpreting? In this hands-on workshop attendees will focus on the development of deverbalization, condensing and anticipation skills in simultaneous interpretation. Emphasis will be placed on establishing the difference between "sense" vs. "meaning" in language processing. Participants will be encouraged to apply the principle of "Think hard, say little" when rendering speech into the target language. Lexical and syntactic anticipation exercises will be introduced as a way of preparing for the unexpected. Attendees will sight translate and simultaneously interpret texts from English into Spanish. Interpretation tasks will be accompanied by a self-assessment exercise that will allow interpreters to identify their strengths and weaknesses. Oral and written anticipation exercises will be practiced.

Objectives: Attendees will learn how to improve and assess their own simultaneous and sight translation skills.

A complete guide to effectively communicate with your clients using the services of professional Interpreters. Attorneys are frequently finding it necessary to use, and depend on, the services of interpreters to communicate with their clients. During this interactive presentation, participants will be learn effective techniques to discern whether the interpreter they are working with is a competent professional who understands the ethical considerations of the encounter, such as confidentiality and impartiality; Does the interpreter possess the technical skills required to ensure accurate and complete interpretation between counsel and client? Participants will also learn about the different levels of certification that exist in the country and the importance of using only certified or professionally trained court interpreters to successfully navigate each interpreted encounter. Finally, the impact of the Court Interpreters Act of 1978, Executive Order 13166, and Title VI will be discussed. All three pieces of legislation focus on protecting the right to due process of any individual brought before a judge, and the role of the attorney as an officer of the court to ensure that the rights of the limited English proficiency (LEP) are preserved.
In this workshop interpreters will review basic techniques needed to perform long consecutive and practice targeted drills to hone subskills. This session will teach participants to implement basic preparation techniques to enhance memory and break down the steps involved in the long consecutive process. Attendees will also evaluate the product of their interpretation within the context of each interpreting setting, as well as the types of question. They will review their own memory aids, and analyze which components of their personal note-taking system work or don't work.

OMG, WTF? TEXTSPEAK IN THE COURTROOM [ETHICS]
LEVEL: ADVANCED
LANGUAGE: ENGLISH W/ SPANISH LEXICON
PRESENTER: ELLEN WINGO
ROOM: JACKSON AB

Screenshots of texts, tweets, and Facebook posts: new media are everywhere in modern life, so naturally they are finding their way into the courtroom. Lawyers and litigants see them as hard evidence to prove their cases; court interpreters see them as something out of a nightmare. The abbreviations and emojis that are typical of new media can make textspeak appear as foreign as Egyptian hieroglyphs, making an accurate sight translation a seemingly impossible task. But the code can be cracked. Through practical exercises, glossary building, and an open discussion on ethics and best practices, this session will address various approaches to deciphering textspeak and to deciding how and when to sight translate in court. This session will be conducted in English with Spanish and English examples.

Objectives: Participants will learn techniques to decipher textspeak and improve their familiarity with the terminology common to new media. They will be able to identify the factors that could make a sight translation possible or impossible, and how to approach the task in an ethical manner.

SATURDAY 8:00 AM – 10:00 AM

“CINEMATIC MEMORY”
LEVEL: ALL
LANGUAGE: LANGUAGE NEUTRAL
PRESENTER: AGUSTÍN SERVIN DE LA MORA
ROOM: LINCOLN CD

Interpreters are expected to cope with a large amount of information and must decide in a short period of time how best to retain and retransmit the messages they receive into the target language. Students will discuss the relationship between memory and note-taking and will practice constructing a narrative for ease of recall and improved confidence.

Objectives: During this interactive session, participants will learn how to improve consecutive interpreting skills by utilizing mnemonic techniques to improve confidence in their stored memories and how to apply said techniques to their daily work as court interpreters.

HUellas dactilares en su Tinta
LEVEL: ALL
LANGUAGE: SPANISH
PRESENTER: DR. GLORIA RIVERA, CMI, CHI
ROOM: JACKSON CD

Fingerprints are a type of physical evidence that can be left on a murder weapon, found at a crime scene, and used to identify human remains. Its analysis uses biological samples for profiling suspects, identifying criminals, and disproving claims. This subject may come up during an expert witness testimony and court. Interpreters need to understand this subject in order to convey the correct meaning. Class presented in Spanish with terminology in English.
Interpretation is a profession in which one never stops learning. Interpreters are often faced with aspects of the profession they would like to learn more about. But how to go about it? Where to even start looking? This interactive session will provide attendees with key resources and strategies to find answers to their questions by academic research. During the first part of the session, the presenters will share examples of research that have practical implications for and applications to daily interpreting practice. Attendees will learn about what studies can be useful, how to find them, how to assess their quality and applicability, and how to transfer the findings of those studies to their jobs. The second part of the session will be hands-on: attendees will put this information into practice to go through the process of trying to answer one or more questions by consulting academic research. Participants should bring your gadgets (laptops, tablets, phones)! Participants will work in small groups with the support and guidance of an SSTI Board member. Finally, the third part of the session will be a Q&A roundtable-style discussion where the SSTI Board and the audience will engage in a productive dialogue about the group practice experiences and, more broadly, about interpreters’ needs and expectations for professional development and how academic research can be an effective tool for achieving that goal.

Objectives: Interpreters will be able to research and evaluate academic studies for purposes of professional development, and to be able to apply any useful findings to their jobs.
Hearing a witness be asked, “Could you please read that paragraph from your report?” can strike fear into the heart of even skilled, experienced court interpreters. They may or may not know what is coming next, but whatever it is will be coming at them FAST because people have a natural tendency to read faster than they speak. Having a copy of whatever materials will be read into the record can offer some measure of relief, but the challenge is nonetheless formidable. Whether it is considered very fast sight translation with a “voiceover” or simultaneous interpreting with the benefit of a “cheat sheet,” the hybrid mode interpreters must employ in these situations can be challenging and disorienting at first. This session aims to first offer a theoretical overview of “sightmultaneous” interpreting, while providing tips on preparation and technique before giving participants a chance to try it for themselves working from English into their target language.

Objectives: Attendees will first be able to analyze sightmultaneous as a mode of interpreting and complete practice exercises in this mode to refine their skills and identify effective strategies.

SOLVING THE MYSTERY: LEGAL TERMINOLOGY FOR BILATERAL PROCEEDINGS MEXICO-U.S.

This presentation, in Spanish, is for full time court interpreters and legal translators who, occasionally, run into terminology not always easy to understand or translate. Lack of understanding of the true meaning of a legal term can conceal the true context and meaning of actions, hearings, and legal strategies, making it difficult to interpret immigration, trade, and international law. Those attending the presentation will learn the answer to questions such as: the difference between asylee and refugee; deportation, immigration judge and officer; credible fear, good moral character, relief, employment-based and family-based immigration; MOUs, treaties and international conventions; tax and tariff; extradition and many more. Today these are fundamental concepts for all interpreters, regardless of their field of expertise. The session will cover these concepts in U.S. legal English and Mexican legal Spanish. They will be analyzed, explained and contextualized. The instructor will suggest bibliography for each term and will provide a glossary. Those attending the presentation will understand attorneys and judges better, producing a more accurate rendition.
The participants will be introduced to transliterations of social media files, audio and digital files, and the challenges encountered in the entire process from accepting a job to being absolutely certain the linguist has the tools and the resources required to render a bilingual script that is accurate and complete. The participants will learn about software and equipment utilized in the process of transliteration of audio files and how to manipulate the sounds, while insuring that the original sound language file remains unchanged. There will be examples of transcripts and basic formats used to preserve evidence. There will also be a discussion of ethics and the confidentiality entrusted in the judiciary interpreter not to divulge any of the content of the evidence with anyone; where to go if questions do come up; what happens when the linguist encounters challenges in these delicate assignments; how to manage and bundle multiple scripts; how to educate clients before accepting the assignment, so the clients know and understand the difference between a translation and a transliteration job; how much time each recorded file will take to review, edit, and transcribe in the source language, and then translate and edit, and transcribe into the format in the source language, and proofing time required, and when a certificate of transliteration / translation is required for a trial; and in the conversion of media files, how to insure the linguist bills enough for the time spent cleaning and converting files into working platforms for translation.

Objectives: Attendees will understand and be able to handle digital files, privacy and security; conversion into working platforms; software for audio augmentation; equipment; time requirements; transcription of multilingual script; options for formatting and assess the value of the time involved.
Join a representative from the Administrative Office of the U.S. Courts to discuss recent updates and engage in a question and answer session.

THE INTERPRETER'S MISTAKE: RECONCILING PRIDE WITH HUMILITY [ETHICS]

Ethical standards demand the performance of accurate interpretations and speaking up when obstacles to interpretations are encountered. But how many interpreters understand how to effectively intervene when required? Furthermore, how can one correct one’s interpretations in a way that upholds ethical standards, but does not undermine the interpreter’s work as a professional? This workshop will explore how to the interpreter can best intervene in proceedings without tarnishing either their reputation or sense of self. Participants will engage in role play to practice intervening in an effective manner, and will leave the session better equipped to handle the challenging situations that arise for the interpreter in real life.

Objectives: Participants will learn the importance of correcting mistakes on the record, and how to do so while maintaining ethical standards and professionalism.

BETWEEN THE PROFESSION AND THE INDUSTRY: INDEPENDENT CONTRACTORS AND THEIR DELICATE RELATIONSHIP WITH LANGUAGE SERVICE PROVIDERS

Interpreters and translators are by a large majority, independent contractors. Until they seek in-house employment or connect directly with end users, their professional success will be greatly affected by their relationship with the agencies that engage their talent. It can be a fruitful, mutually beneficial experience or it can be a source of continuous frustration. New agencies, new technologies, new ways of interacting keep this a lively and controversial landscape. Let’s hear different players explain their views and answer your questions so that we can learn how both profession and industry can help each other thrive.

FORENSIC LINGUISTICS & COURT INTERPRETING

In this session interpreters will be introduced to the field of forensic linguistics and the findings that can enhance a court interpreter’s understanding of the complex dynamics of having two languages coexisting during proceedings. The role of the interpreter will be analyzed through the lens of this discipline. Examples will highlight the benefits of anticipating the procedural patterns followed by participants (attorneys, witnesses, police officers, expert witnesses, judges, court clerks) when presenting information before the court.
Stress and the effects of trauma appear in a broad spectrum of professions and can occur in practically any career. Working with people who have survived trauma carries a risk of secondary trauma and burnout for the service provider and other individuals involved, namely, the interpreter. In this interactive session, the presenter will analyze several theoretical approaches pertaining to occupational health in the interpreting field, and discuss how these approaches can be applied as a holistic framework which guides interpreters in their development of ethical and effective decision-making skills. The participants will also examine negative and positive experiences and consequences of working with survivors of trauma. They will analyze some ethical questions that arise as part of complex emotional and psychological demands, and they will learn how to mitigate barriers and manage conflicts in an aesthetically pleasing, highly user-friendly manner. Self-care practices for interpreters to limit or prevent the exposure will be examined, and a comprehensive and coherent self-care plan for engaging in reflective interpreting practice will be developed. The session is presented in English.

Objectives: In this session, attendees will learn specific techniques, strategies and self-care practices unique to providing interpretation and translation services for victims and survivors of domestic violence, sexual assault, torture, human trafficking and other acts of violence.

The interpreter has passed the exam and can now start working in the courtroom, but is thrust into a world where abbreviations and shortened phrases are thrown about like they're common phrases. Even experienced interpreters who work primarily in settings outside the courtroom, such as depositions, or who don’t work in more than one courtroom setting, may be thrown off by the casual way attorneys and judges use abbreviations with which they are unfamiliar. What's the difference between an FSC, USC, and TRC? What is meant by "any legal cause?" What does 977 refer to? What are the various waivers in sentencing? Where are DP and DQ used? These are just some examples of abbreviations or shortened phrases that may trip up an interpreter if they are unfamiliar with the meanings, because interpreters cannot interpret what they don’t understand. This session will provide a robust list of these terms and shortened phrases in English with definitions, as well as the contexts in which they are used, so that the interpreter is well-prepared to let them slip off the tongue as easily as they do from other courtroom officers. The list will be provided in English with definitions and discussion of translations, mostly for Spanish.

Objectives: To provide common and some uncommon abbreviations and shortened phrases that are thrown about every day in the courtroom, and that may catch interpreters off guard.

TRANSLATING LATIN AMERICAN CASE LAW FROM SPANISH TO ENGLISH

LEVEL: ADVANCED
LANGUAGE: ENGLISH W/ SPANISH LEXICON
PRESENTER: MADELINE RIOS
ROOM: JACKSON AB

This presentation will review the special challenges involved in translating Latin American Case Law into English. Topics will include philosophical differences between the Civil and Common Law legal traditions that affect how case law is written, the concepts of jurisprudencia and doctrina, the structure of case law documents, the need for knowledge of procedural aspects, challenging phrases particular to case law translation, stylistic differences between Spanish and English that affect case law translation, and research techniques. The presentation will be in English, using examples from Spanish case law.

Objectives: Attendees will become familiar with philosophical differences between the Civil and Common Law legal traditions.

ADVOCATING FOR COURT INTERPRETER WAGE POLICIES BASED ON OBJECTIVE CRITERIA

LEVEL: ALL
LANGUAGE: ENGLISH
PRESENTERS: SANDRO TOMASI AND MARY LOU ARANGUREN
ROOM: WASHINGTON B

How can professional court interpreters explain the difficulty of their work to monolinguals, even many bilinguals, who believe that interpreting is “just” repeating whatever was said in another language? Court interpreters know how hard interpreting in courtrooms can be because they have lived through it. While many strides have been made over the last 20 years to improve language-access services in the courts, most court administrators continue to undervalue the knowledge, skills and abilities of court interpreters. This seminar will analyze objective criteria regarding the job of a court interpreter and review some of the judicial policies that have increased salaries thereof.

Objectives: Inform court interpreters and court administrators of the latest policy trends regarding court interpreter salaries.

DEFENDING YOUR FORENSIC TRANSCRIPTION TRANSLATION (FTT): EXPERT WITNESS TIPS

You produced an FTT (Forensic Transcription Translation) a year ago and it was well received, but now... OMG..., you just got “the call” – you know, the one where they want you to appear as an expert witness to defend it at trial! What to do? Here’s a presentation and discussion of specific challenges you’ll want to know about in order to “bullet-proof” your FTT expert testimony so that it stands up to adversarial scrutiny.

FAITES ENTRER L’ACCUSÉ / BRING IN THE DEFENDANT

LEVEL: INTERMEDIATE
LANGUAGE: FRENCH
PRESENTER: GLADYS MATTHEWS, PHD
ROOM: JACKSON CD

Witness testimony, including specialized terminology, of course, but also everyday language expressions, pose a wide array of challenges. Using excerpts from the French television series, Faîtes entrer l’accusé, this session will analyze examples of challenging language used by victims, family members, psychologists, lawyers, and others involved in a criminal case. Special attention will be given to terminology related to criminal acts such as kidnapping, assault, rape, and murder (e.g. acte ignoble/heinous crime), as well as expressions describing mental states or feelings (e.g. effondré/devastated, brutalité/viciousness, and acharnement/fury). This session will also analyze idiomatic expressions such as du coup, être carré, faire quelque chose à l’emporte-pièce, etc., and propose equivalents in English. An intermediate to advanced level of French is desirable.

Objectives: At the end of this session, participants will be familiar with a number of challenging everyday language and specialized terms frequently used during witness testimony proceedings.

Interpret everything. Add nothing. Omit nothing. Remain neutral. The role of the court interpreter is narrowly defined by codes of ethics: to level the playing field between English speakers and non-English speakers in the legal setting. But every interpreter has had this experience: despite the completely accurate interpretation of a message, two parties understand two very different things because they come from different cultural backgrounds. Is the playing field really level when the cultural divide can be wider than the language one? In healthcare, an interpreter can bring the speaker’s attention to the misunderstanding, but in the legal setting, the interpreter may feel stuck in the middle, aware of the disconnect, but bound by ethics not to intervene. In this session, the presenters will review standards of practice followed by healthcare interpreters that allow them to intervene to offer clarification. They will also share the results of a survey of medical and legal interpreters on how they apply — and sometimes bend — their codes of ethics, stepping outside the role of strict interpretation to further communication between the parties. Participants will engage in an open discussion based on scenarios of different ethical dilemmas in order to examine whether there is a place in court interpreter ethics for intervention.

Objectives: Participants will be able to review healthcare interpreter standards of practice related to interventions to offer clarification and consider their applicability in the legal setting. They will be able to reflect on their own conduct, as well as that of colleagues as shared through a survey of medical and court interpreters. They will analyze ethical dilemmas and discuss if an incremental intervention model could be incorporated into court interpreter ethics.
Many common words in English have a completely different meaning and different target language equivalent—when used in a legal context in the United States. For example, vacating the premises is very different from vacating an order, noticing something is not the same as taking judicial notice, and religious convictions are quite different from criminal convictions. For this reason, court interpreters must master not only the everyday speech of their source and target languages, but also the ways in which words may acquire radically different meanings when applied to a legal setting. This session will focus on 50 common English words that have a very different meaning when used in a legal setting. Participants will (1) learn the meaning of these words when used in a legal context in the United States and (2) prepare an English-Spanish glossary of them. By the end of the session, participants will be well equipped to avoid mistakes in their renditions of these terms.

Objectives: Attendees will learn what can be done to earn the respect deserved as a profession. Attendees will be provided food for thought about how individual behavior and business practices affect the profession and how it can be changed from within rather than hoping that the outside world will show respect on their own.

It is very much in the interest of every linguist and the profession at large if it is better understood by the general public, if it is better paid and more respected. Language professionals oftentimes think that the outside world does not perceive them as the proper professionals that they are, but here’s some tough love: some of this might be the professional’s own fault. This is a discussion of what can be done to earn the place professional linguists deserve—and about the things language professionals, in aggregate, have not always done well in the past. Professional respect and high rates are earned and not bestowed on anyone, and all should work together to increase the importance of language services in clients’ minds. The speaker will share effective techniques that all can use to take the profession to the next level. Spoiler alert: raising the profession’s image requires a bit of hard work for everyone, but should reap great rewards. The speaker will address why language professionals are often their own worst enemies, what women can learn from men in terms of assertiveness, how to deal with critical and timely issues such as sexual harassment, and about the boundaries of ethics.

This is a chance to listen to some of the presenters at the conference as they expound on their views on topics of interest to the profession and to the industry. They can also provide their insights on technical, ethical and protocol issues, examinations and credentials and how to best navigate one’s own advancement in the field. This will be a panel with a moderator, divided into two segments.
Substituting or complementing the written word with symbols seems to be a trend today, even for the most awkward social dystopians. Language always changes, but it’s exceedingly rare—maybe even unprecedented—for a phonetic alphabet to suddenly acquire a big expansion pack of ideograms. Peppering our digital communication with convenient non-verbal cues and well-timed wit in the form of emoji is exactly how people interact when they chat every day, making faces and gesturing, but what do emoji mean for a translator, or even better, a legal translator? Indeed, the legal world has had to take notice of emoji, as lawyers have started bringing forward text communications sent by people accused of crime as evidence and adding them to the courtroom repertoire: texts, sexts, emails, tweets, laced with emoji. In this interactive session, attendees will be able to build techniques and develop strategies for successful and adequate rendition of emoji through practical exercises, online resources, best practices, and codes of ethics. The session is presented in English and Emoji.

Objectives In this interactive session, attendees will identify cross-cultural pitfalls and technological divides in vastly different interpretations of emoji and will learn how to find the best way to accurately convey the meaning of emoji. The participants will also learn the latest trends in research and legal discourse pertaining to emoji and improve their emoji terminology management and research skills. The session is presented in English and Emoji.

Learn skills and techniques used by actors and improvisers that can help you become a better interpreter. Actors control their voice, inflection, and emotions. Improvisers think quickly on their feet, create and embody characters and situations and place ultimate trust in their teammates. While used for different purposes, these skills are key to being an excellent interpreter. Join this engaging session and explore how voice control, stage (stand) presence, and remaining cool under pressure assist interpreters to better their craft. There will be practice in thinking on one’s feet, coming up with creative solutions, and presenting emotive interpretation. This session should be used to become a better interpreter and have fun doing so.
